From Earth To Terra: A New Beginning (Volume 1) Beverly Jenness

Some 200 years in our future, the Earth is dying. Climate change has taken its toll. The rains do not fall. Wars are waged over the most precious commodity, clean water. The Life Trust Guild, a group with ties dating back for hundreds of years, have been planning a solution. They have infiltrated all levels of government and businesses. Their scientists have searched the cosmos for another planet, one where they could send people from Earth, and they found one. Now, all they had to do is steal a couple of spaceships from NASA, load them with supplies and all the knowledge from Earth they can lay their hands on, toss in a few hundred civilians, shake well and voila, instant Earth. Unfortunately, things don't always go how they are planned. The dynamics of the people on board cause some serious disturbances in the tranquility of the new settlements on Terra. The prejudices from those who had money against those that didn't and against the Tubers, genetically modified humans, begin to fester. The colonists were paired up before they left, as expanding the population was crucial. Follow along as these settlers try to survive all that their new world throws at them while trying to avoid a major internal rift between the factions.
