This short story, set in 1950s Ireland, is a delightful coming of age tale about a young boy struggling with the overwhelming anger and grief of losing his adored father.

A lot has gone wrong for young Frankie O'Connor in the year since his father died. His sister has run off to America, his mother has been forced to work for mean-spirited Michael Duffy, and Frankie's golden singing voice has suffered the ravages of puberty, threatening to derail his dreams of someday following his idol, Frank Sinatra, to singing stardom in America.

But when Frankie is convinced he has cursed a man and sent him to an early grave, the young lad's dreams of fame and fortune take a back seat to his gripping fear of the eternal damnation that awaits unless he can find a way to make things right.
