Deep in the heart of Patience, Indiana, Amanda is a strong, independent young woman who runs an Amish bakery to support her younger brother. Orphaned when her parents pass in a tragic carriage accident, Amanda and Peter only have each other--until Simon, a kind but over confident young British baker, arrives in town and joins the staff at the bakery.

With his gorgeous blond looks, wicked sense of humor and advanced culinary techniques, Simon both intrigues and frustrates his new employer. These two strong, willful young people are at odds over everything from baking practices to pricing--until they find themselves falling in love; much to the consternation of Amanda's brother and most of her friends and neighbors. As the besotted young couple lose themselves in the romance of a lifetime, they face potential Shaming at the hands of the village elders. Will Amanda dare to love a man from a different world?
